The CYDUS project (Cinema and Sustainable Human Development) aims to enable young people from Equatorial Guinea to pursue a professional career in the film industry, a promising sector which nevertheless requires the development of training.

This will be achieved by setting up the first multidisciplinary workshop-school for audiovisual creation and production, dedicated to filmmaking and other audiovisual genres such as TV series and documentaries).

The workshop-school will be set up with quality equipment and will host trainers, both local and foreign, to train 100 young men and women in all areas of audiovisual production. At the end of their training, the students will undertake two projects: a TV mini-series and a short film.

After completion of the CYDUS project, the workshop-school will officially apply for a license from the Ministry of Labor, Employment Promotion and Social Security to offer scholarships to destitute candidates and thus continue its training activities. Additionally, the workshop-school will offer professional workshops to companies and individuals, based on their resources, with a view to sustaining its activities.
